

ABSTRACT

It is an object of the present invention to provide a novel method for measuring collagen, which is capable of measuring a small amount of collagen contained in a small amount of sample, when only a small amount of sample, such as in the case of mouse urine, is obtained. The present invention provides a method for measuring collagen by immunoanalysis using an anti-collagen antibody which is characterized in that a test sample is treated with a reducing agent.